

Peter Coppola

Peter Coppola is sole proprietor of Supply Safe, a consultancy providing capture management, business development and program management support to Government contracts. A hands-on manager, he works directly with the customers and sub-contractors to ensure project success by applying lessons learned from experience gained integrating technical solutions.

Peter began his professional career as a mechanical engineer working in research, development, and systems design, earning several U.S. patents for work in electro-mechanical sensors and water filtration. He transferred into the Government Services sector as a systems engineer, working with base management, operations, and logistics support contracts.

Peter is a life long gardener. He earned his Master Gardener certification through the Massachusetts Horticultural Society program in 2002. Applying his business problem solving skills to gardening, he offers a unique perspective on the subject. He has hosted a gardening show on local cable. He has lectured and taught courses, and he currently writes a weekly newspaper column on the subject.

Peter is also active in the community as a volunteer and elected official. His civic activities include service as a Planning Board Member and Recreation Commissioner for the Town of Burlington.
